Clark Welcomes a Familiar Trio to Wagner

By Flon Wong

Marcia Wagner, head of Wagner Law Group, based in Boston, Massachusetts, expanded her St. Louis, Missouri office with three new hires. The new hires, who officially started today, include: ERISA attorney Dannae Delano as partner, labor and employment attorney Ivan Schraeder as counsel, and Margaret Fuhr as paralegal officially started in their new roles today.

Tom Clark, the head attorney at the St. Louis practice, worked with the trio previously at Lowenbaum Law, which ceased to exist on December 1. "Tom worked with them for many years, so it makes sense to have them join our St. Louis office," commented Ari Sonneberg, chief marketing officer and attorney at Wagner.

Delano will be specializing in all aspects of employee benefits, such as health welfare plans, tax planning, ACA compliance work, and retirement plan work. She confirms that she will be doing the same work as she did back at Lowenbaum. Clark commented "Our practices compliment each other, she focuses on health and welfare and traditional tax matters, while I focus on fiduciary matters and litigation," Clark says.

Although specific roles aren't currently being scouted, Wagner is keeping an open mind for future additions. Sonneberg says, "We are always looking for people of caliber and exceptional talent that our firm has come to represent. Our firm has become the best in ERISA, and we insist that any attorneys we hire meet those standards."

Wagner was not immediately available for comment.

Wagner Law Group focuses on employee benefits and ERISA. There are currently three attorneys and two paralegals at their St. Louis practice. A total of 31 attorneys operate at seven different offices nationwide. Lowenbaum Law was a St. Louis, Missouri-based labor and employment law firm.
